HOW TO PLAY

Let It Ride is a variation on the standard game of stud poker. The object of the game is to have the player make the best five-card poker hand using their three cards and two community cards. Players play against a pay table instead of the dealer and have the option to take back the first two of their three initial bets. To play, a player places three equal bets on the Let It Ride layout in each of the three spots, (1) (2) ($). The dealer then gives three cards to everyone playing and two cards face down in the community card area. These community cards are revealed by the dealer one at a time as the game progresses. To begin, players look at their three cards. The dealer then asks each player in turn if they wish to take back their first bet or "Let It Ride." The dealer then turns over the first community card. Players are again asked if they would like to take back their second bet or "Let It Ride" after which all players place their cards face-down on the layout in front of their wagers. The dealer turns over the second community card and in turn each of the players' hands. Winners are paid based on their hand. No matter what players have opted to do with their two previous bets, a player's third bet ($) may not be removed as this is a "Contract Bet." The maximum aggregated payout per hand is $50,000.
